SEAMEN'S CHURCH INSTITUTE
of New York

A decade after it was established in 1834, the Seamen's Church Institute of New York offered sailors a floating chapel. Before long, the Institute incorporated its religious work into shore centers that were able to fulfill in action the principles of the Christian faith upon which it was founded.

Today at 25 South Street it maintains the world's largest shore center for active merchant seamen, offering them nearly every facility and service of their real home towns—which they must be away from most of their lives. Established by the Protestant Episcopal Church, the Institute serves the merchant seamen of all nations, races and religions.

of New York

Serving men of the seven seas as a home town, created by Christian vision, supported and maintained by merchant seamen and their neighbors ashore.

THE COVER: Parting is probably never quite as casual as shipmates try to make it. John Barron captures the moment when a sailor leaves his ship to come ashore in New York.

Down Sailor's

Boulevard

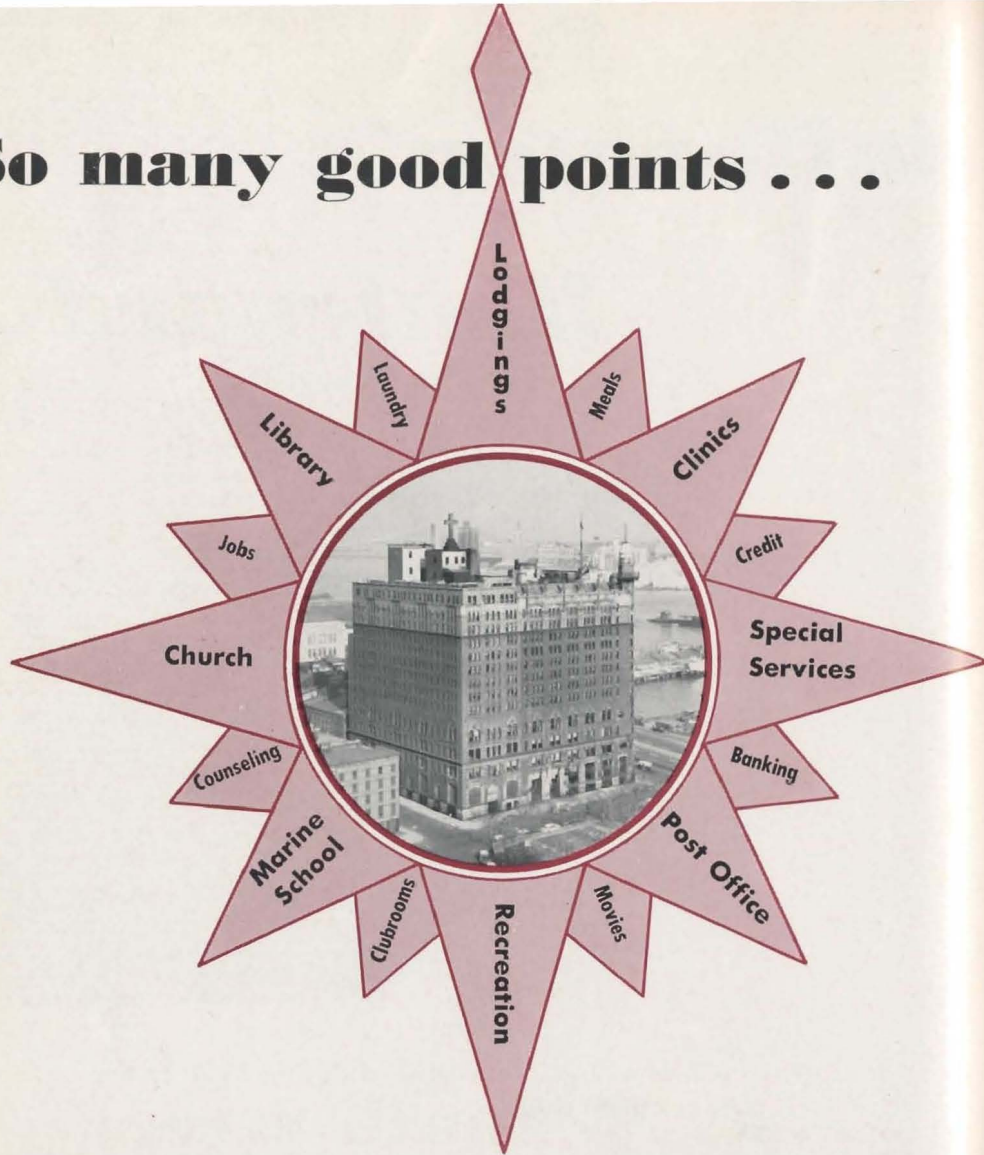

Born of the sea, New York was sustained during 1957 by the arrival of 12,936 merchant ships.

The sailors who brought the coffee, oil, sugar, nails and newsprint for the industries and homes of the nation also brought themselves. Some came ashore to stretch, some had to catch a train home, some had to "live a little." Others were coming back to the waterfront to ship again. They all came to New York looking for a familiar face, a smile, a chance to talk, a mark of home.

They came, thousands of them, down "Sailor's Boulevard," down historic South Street to the Seamen's Church Institute. Here at 25 South Street they found friends; they found their own home town, a shore center which New Yorkers and those indebted to ocean commerce everywhere help sailors to maintain at the nation's gateway.

So many good points . . .

. . . at 25 South Street

They came for many practical reasons. An average of six hundred and seventy came daily during 1957 for the cardinal points of a hotel: rooms, meals, mail, barber, laundry, tailor, telephone. These and hundreds more came for the many other special facilities and services encompassing virtually every need of the sailor ashore.

But the services weren't the only point. In a way, they weren't even the most important, because these men could have made out somehow elsewhere.

They came for more than things and services. They came to joke with Tommy at the door; they came to tell Spanish Joe the barber about their stop in Spain; they came to say hello to an old friend; to thank Bill for all he had done, and they came to tell Katey at the notion counter that they had sailed 3,000 miles just to see her.

They came because they felt at home at 25 South Street, just as the New Yorker feels at home in his own neighborhood.

Sailors from many countries came to the Institute's Conrad Library during 1957. Some came to learn more of their trade, some to learn more of the world it serves. Some turned the pages of romantic fiction and some read to learn the history, geography, art and language of other lands. Some struggled with the great philosophical systems, and others sought specific knowledge. One sailor was frustrated in his search for a book on how to make his own dental plates.

American seamen, confronted with a steadily shrinking fleet, were often after knowledge of other trades, such as radio, electricity, engineering, carpentry, gardening, farming, beauty culture, bookbinding and leathercraft.

Sailors from Europe, Latin America and Asia found a variety of reading material in their own language. This included material in Urdu and Bengali.

To men aboard ship the Library gave 24,000 books and 142,000 magazines to be read and passed along to other sailors and other ships. They were bundled and delivered by the Institute's Ship Visitors.

Attendance at the Library was nearly 50,000.

Turning the pages

The school bell also drew men to 25 South Street in 1957. Enrollment at the Institute's Merchant Marine School picked up late in the year when scarce shipping berths made the choice easier. Personal tutoring and small classes smoothed the way for men studying for higher ratings in the deck and engineering departments.

Throughout the year, other sailors found the staff helpful also in explaining the ever-changing Coast Guard regulations which govern merchant shipping.

A familiar voice

Frequently during the year, seamen needing help of a kind not easily found in the classified phone book called on the Personal Service Bureau at the Institute. Some came for help with job applications, citizenship papers, compensation forms, affidavits or unemployment insurance. Some wanted to hear what a long-time friend would think of this or that.

From a ship at sea one wrote: "With this dollar please pick up a copy of operating instructions for my radio set, and if there is any change left, send a birthday card to my girl." There was change enough.

A retired sailor who stayed at the Institute for 40 years before going to live in an old folks' home, stopped in several times to have his mail read to him by someone with a familiar voice.

One sailor said, "I used to think I was the only one you were nice to, but I find there are a million other guys who feel the same way."

Early in the year, most seamen came down Sailorman's Boulevard with their pockets a-jingling, but later on shipping slacked off, and the Institute's Credit Bureau helped out with more than 3,000 interest-free loans, taking a man's word as collateral.

Temporary shoreside jobs weren't too plentiful, but the Institute's Employment Bureau turned up 3,700 of them to help other seamen over the low spots.

Reaching out

Like good neighbors who call upon new folks in town, the ship visitors from the Institute went aboard 2,677 vessels docked in New York during the year to say hello and extend to their crewmembers a welcome to New York and to the Institute.

The ship visitors brought with them books, magazines, subway maps and a desire to help those aboard make the most of their time in New York. The pay of American seamen signing off in this port was safeguarded through the sale of traveler's checks and by bank deposits arranged by the ship visitors.

From mid-October until Christmas the ship visitors were often undercover Santas helping to smuggle Christmas boxes aboard the more than 80 ships that left New York with one for each crewmember.

Ship visitation during the year brought the Institute in personal contact with the men of 23 nations. Seamen from other lands always welcomed the colorful American magazines, and they were extremely appreciative of newspapers in their own language, which the ship visitors frequently brought aboard. There was nothing to buy and nothing to sell, except friendship. In return for favors like getting snapshots developed, mailing letters, helping a man phone a relative, and for countless other kindnesses, foreign ship visitors were offered enough cups of coffee to float the Queen Mary.

Extended opportunities to introduce foreign seamen to New York and to Americans came several times during the year when entire crews stayed at the Institute while waiting for ship repairs or to take over a vessel. Guided tours and attention to individual needs earned the good will of two South African crews who came to New York just as trouble was coming to Little Rock, Arkansas.

Chart and compass

Coming down South last year, as a century ago, seamen came to a church. Unlike its floating chapel predecessors, the Institute of 1957 was not another church in town, but another town created by a church, a town centered around the special needs of merchant seamen, a town motivated by the teachings of Christ and the clergy did more than administer the sacraments in the Institute Chapel of Our Saviour, where daily services were held. They were the chart and compass.

They were good neighbors to all who entered. Those who came troubled found the chaplains good friends, willing and able to extend help, man to man or man to God, meeting each problem with Christian devotion and with constantly improving skills made possible by study and special training in the arts and tested techniques of personal counseling.

The chaplains answered calls from seamen hospitalized anywhere in the city. At the U. S. Public Health Service Hospital on Staten Island, a resident chaplain provided by the Institute was on the spot when a sailor needed him.

"It wasn't just the gift"

Many a sailor who couldn't be home for Christmas was remembered on that day by the Institute. Aboard ships at sea, in the hospitals and at 25 South Street, nearly 7,000 seamen opened Christmas gift boxes prepared by the Women's Council. In each box there were ten individually wrapped gifts, including watch caps, scarves or socks hand knitted by volunteers from all over America.

The Christmas program took a lot of work, starting early in the spring and continuing through the summer and fall, but the volunteers were rewarded by the knowledge that their efforts would be remembered long after the winter snows were gone. Sailors wrote from all over the world to express their appreciation, so often saying, "It wasn't just the gift, but that someone I didn't know had spent the time and the effort to place it in my hands on Christmas day."

The "Night Watch" of Women's Council provided hostesses and gifts for the seamen's monthly birthday party.

Oceans, skies and men

Sailormen came to 25 South Street from all over the world again last year. They came for some of the reasons suggested in this all-too-brief report, and for reasons that cannot be pictured, feelings that live in the reaches of the human heart and soul.

In responding to these human feelings, the Seamen's Church Institute is dedicated to a frontier that will remain not only as long as sailors go to sea, but as long as people talk to one another while they search to learn the beginning and the end of oceans, skies and men.

The good things done at 25 South Street last year were done only with the help of good people who believe it is important to be home and to answer when the wayfaring sailor calls at the port of New York.

TO THE BOARD OF MANAGERS, SEAMEN'S CHURCH INSTITUTE OF NEW YORK

We have examined the accounts of the Seamen's Church Institute of New York for the year ended December 31, 1957. Our examination was made in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards. In our opinion, the accompanying statement of income and expense presents fairly the results of its operation for the year then ended, in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles applied on a basis consistent with that of the preceding year.

LEGACIES TO THE INSTITUTE

You are asked to remember this Institute in your will, that it may properly carry on its important work for seamen. While it is advisable to consult your lawyer as to the drawing of your will, we suggest the following as a clause that may be used:

"I give and bequeath to Seamen's Church Institute of New York, a corporation of the State of New York, located at 25 South Street, New York City, the sum of.....Dollars."

Note that the words "of New York" are a part of our title. If land or any specific property such as bonds, stocks, etc., is given, a brief description of the property should be inserted instead of the words, "the sum of.....Dollars."

Contributions and bequests to the Institute are exempt from Federal and New York State Tax.
